Most Likely to Succeed: Summary of the Key Ideas - Original Book by Tony Wagner, Ted Dintersmith: Preparing Our Kids for the Innovation Era Evolvo

Getting good grades and obtaining a degree from a prestigious college is not enough anymore to be qualified for the modern working world. The innovation era requires critical thinking and good communication; skills which are not taught in school. In order for students to be adequately prepared, we need to reimagine education and transform the current system.

Who should read this book:

- College graduates who are struggling with unemployment or unsatisfied with their jobs.
- Teachers who want to find out how education can be improved and help students succeed.
- Students who are interested in new methods of teaching.
- Anyone who wants to know more about the current education model and what needs to be done to teach students the skills they need to succeed.

In this summary:

Chapter 1: The innovation era requires creativity and critical thinking

Chapter 2: The focus needs to shift from knowledge to teaching essential life skills

Chapter 3: Schools should help students find their passion and a purpose in life

Chapter 4: Students need to be trained in the “five habits of mind”

Chapter 5: We ought to rethink the way we teach math and English

Chapter 6: Knowledge has to be applied in order to enable deeper learning

Chapter 7: High tuition fees force a lot of students to take out loans

Chapter 8: Active participation is much more effective than passive listening

Chapter 9: Work samples and experience tell more about a person than a degree

Chapter 10: Final Summary
