Two Brothers, One Redhead, and a Stolen Giraffe: a coming-of-age novel Sarah Mandell

The McElroy brothers find trouble easily. Dylan plunges headfirst into it, while Daniel cleans up behind him. That's the way it's always been, ever since their mother left them to be bounced around the foster system, causing trouble wherever they went. The soon-to-be euthanized giraffe they just stole from the Northside Animal Park may be their biggest predicament yet, in more ways than one, but there's no undoing what's been done.

Lost in Nebraska without a plan, clueless how to care for the ornery old beast in the back of the trailer, the well-meaning brothers stop to rest at an abandoned-looking barn. A pretty redhead with a snappy temperament and a shotgun discovers the boys and their sixteen-foot stowaway. Her name is Josephine, she lives on this farm with her father who is spoken of, but never seen, and her root cellar has more locks than a bank vault. She's got a way with animals and plenty of secrets, not to mention the interest of two brothers who swore they'd never let some girl come between them.
