Guelfes et Gibelins (French Edition) Alexandre Dumas

Les guelfes et les gibelins sont deux factions (parti ou, plus souvent, brigade ou sette) médiévales qui s'opposèrent militairement, politiquement et culturellement dans l'Italie des Duecento et Trecento. À l'origine, elles soutenaient respectivement deux dynasties qui se disputaient le trône du Saint-Empire : la pars Guelfa appuyait les prétentions de la dynastie des « Welfs » et de la papauté, puis de la maison d'Anjou, la pars Gebellina, celles des Hohenstaufen, et au-delà celles du Saint-Empire. Conflit en apparence limité au Saint-Empire, l'opposition entre Guelfes et Gibelins va se transporter dans diverses parties d'Europe, principalement dans les villes de la péninsule italienne. Dans cette bipolarisation, parfois surestimée, les allégeances dynastiques sont parfois secondaires, les adhésions fluctuantes, et il faut attendre le règne de Frédéric II pour que papauté et empire deviennent des symboles forts de ralliement et que se construise une véritable division antithétique. Ce clivage trouve des manifestations dans le domaine civique et religieux et cristallise les tensions entre les villes italiennes, au sein de leurs élites et parfois entre la ville et son contado. L'écho du conflit se manifeste à des époques ultérieures, en revêtant de nouveaux caractères et en stigmatisant des oppositions idéologiques nouvelles.
