Revenge of Cornelius (The Cornelius Saga Book 2) Tanya R. Taylor

Six-year-old Rosie sees a tall, "friendly" man, but doesn't realize that she's in the pathway of an angry ghost with revenge on his mind.

The yard had a sickening silence around it—one that she had felt inside the house many times, especially at night. There was a light mist in the air as well, which was hugely unusual for that time of day. Then approximately, seventy-five feet near the edge of the property that led into an area of land densely populated by fruit-bearing trees and overgrown brush, she saw Theo advancing.

His white shirt was muddied with dirt and his short, black pants were darted with tiny prickles. He was sweating profusely.

"Where have you been?" Andrea asked curiously. "And where's Rosie?"

The closer he got to her, Andrea could see that the pupils of his eyes had an abnormally darker hue and the expression on his face was blank and unreadable.

"I saw her walk through the family room and out onto the deck," he started. "I thought she was just going to sit outside, but after a while I noticed she never came back in. That's when I went to look for her."

Andrea was listening intently and watching the mannerism that didn't appear to belong to her husband.

"I didn't say anything to you because I thought I'd find her playing in the yard. After I didn't see her, I went further off into the property to look for her, but I have no idea where she went." He shrugged.

"My God! This can't be happening!" Andrea exclaimed, worrying less about Theo's odd behavior and more about the child's sudden disappearance. "We have to find her!"

OVERVIEW:

After returning home for a family visit, Mira finds herself in front of the old Ferguson house again - a place she has blatantly avoided since the entire life-altering experience of fifteen years earlier. The only thing is...there are new residents now, but not the kind she would have ever expected to see.

Her six-year-old daughter, Rosie, has an incredible bond with her grandfather, but no one ever dreams that the little girl will be the bait an angry ghost uses to settle a score long overdue. She is in terrible danger, but no one knows it and the love of her grandfather will be tested to the highest extreme.

The Ferguson House

- A Heart-wrenching History
- An Innocent Child
- Unlikely Inhabitants
- The Haunting
- The HUNTED!

Don't be afraid. It's just...Them.
