What if Doc Brown hadn't had Marty McFly to abscond with his time machine for its maiden voyage? What if an old inventor was able to take his machine on his own trip through time? His lifelong work is complete. Now Harris Johnson, scientist and inventor, will begin the journey for which he has sacrificed everything. He will not travel to other countries or other planets. Other times are his destination. Although he is a man of many years, with a lifetime of experience behind him, Harris travels forward to see what will become of humanity, and finds that in traveling to the future, he can better understand the mistakes of his past.
