Audrey Simmons—part African-American, part white, part Cherokee—is young, talented, and unusually attractive. She's determined to make her name in the fashion world. But it's 1936—if she's to have any chance at success, she must "pass" for white in her work life. Ignoring the possible dangers, and despite her straight-laced upbringing, Audrey accepts the offer of a "gentleman" to be his assistant on a trip to England, First Class, aboard the new ocean liner, the Queen Mary. For her, it's an irresistible chance to get to the heart of fashion—London and Paris. But her eyes are opened on this journey. The “gentleman” is not what he seems. And a man she meets onboard, who makes her heart race, turns out to be a professional gambler. Audrey's forced to grow up fast.
